The Crown Jewels of Zembla

Tobias Buckell is annoyed by an AI-written online article about him: 'ChatGPT has also been utilized by award-winning author Tobias Buckell. Buckell wrote his latest novel, It Has Come to Our Attention, with the assistance of the platform. In an interview with Locus Magazine, Buckell said that using ChatGPT allowed him to create more complex, nuanced, and realistic characters without sacrificing pacing or plot. He stated that without ChatGPT's help, he would not have been able to finish his manuscript on time.' He retorts: 'I don't use ChatGPT (or LLMs), nor ever have, on my fiction.' (BlueSky, 10 December) We live in a post-truth era.

Cait Corrain (who?) ruthlessly sabotaged her own debut sf novel Crown of Starlight, now removed from the 2024 schedule at Del Rey. The author Xiran Jay Zhao assembled evidence that Corrain was responsible for a spate of 'review bombing' using multiple fake accounts at Goodreads to attack the perceived opposition with negative reviews of unreleased first novels – targeting POC authors, some from Del Rey – while giving high ratings to Crown of Starlight. Corrain's claim that all this was done by a 'former friend' (whose existence could not be verified) was widely disbelieved; she later tweeted a 'sincere apology' blaming everything on 'alcoholism, depression and substance abuse'. Her literary agent Becca Podos 'will not be continuing our partnership'. (xTwitter passim; The Mary Sue, 11 December; xTwitter 'apology', 12 December)

Altany Craik, author and long-time Labour councillor in Fife, stepped down as a 2024 general election candidate 'for family reasons', strongly rumoured to be because the party objected to his Father Andrew Steel occult crime thrillers as 'too sexy and satanic'. (Guardian, 13 December)

Lauren M. Davis, US author of a fantasy novel featuring sun-derived superpowers, made legal threats – with a generous side helping of racism – against Nigerian author Marvellous Michael Anson for the hideous copyright violation of using sun-themed powers in her Firstborn of the Sun. Citing such prior art as Apollo, Ra and a huge list (including Superman) in the Superpower Wiki was of no avail. (Daily Dot, 19 December)

Diana L. Paxson the US fantasy author was repeatedly stabbed – as was her son – in her home in Berkeley CA on 8 December. Both received hospital treatment; neither is in danger. (SB/LW) The 23-year-old attacker Byron Decles, 'a member of our extended family' with a history of mental health problems, was found and arrested on 12 December. (CBS, 8 December; Wildhunt.org, 11 December; Berkeley Scanner, 12 December)

Lavie Tidhar gleefully tweeted: 'Take that, Louis Theroux and L. Ron Hubbard!' His novel The Circumference of the World was in the top place (with Theroux at #4, and Hubbard at #6 with Dianetics) of the no doubt prestigious list 'Best Sellers in Scientology'. (xTwitter, 8 December)

Infinitely Improbable

As Others See Us. 'Science fiction is not simply politically useless, it's dangerous. Two centuries of sci-fi have been a net negative for the world, fueling the megalomaniacal fantasies of tech tyrants and inspiring the invention of untold horrors. The world would be a better place without it.' (Tyler Austin Harper, xTwitter, 9 December)

Awards. Prometheus Hall of Fame shortlist: Orion Shall Rise (1983) by Poul Anderson; The Truth (2000) by Terry Pratchett; 'The Trees' (1978 song) by Rush; Between the Rivers (1998) by Harry Turtledove. [F770]

Blurbismo. A mere author [name redacted] ascends to a higher state: 'Leadership has always been in her bones, however ... with a meticulous nature, a raw understanding of the writer's psyche and a memory for details, it was almost inevitable she would evolve from a novelist, editor and poet to then, events organiser.' (Facebook, 10 December) [JLG]

● Random Fandom. Caroline Mullan asked Bing AI chat about her years as a Clarke Award judge: 'I could not find any information that suggests Caroline Mullan is a judge for the Arthur C. Clarke Award. However, I did find that Caroline Mullan has served as a judge for the Rotsler Award and the British Science Fiction Association awards. She has also won several fanzine awards.' All wrong! (Facebook, 28 December)

● Publishers & Sinners. Small Beer Press is closed to submissions, perhaps forever, owing to the publisher Gavin Grant's post-Covid health problems; but existing titles will stay in print. (Tor.com, 20 December)

● Court Circular: Legal Advice Dept. 'Meta Platforms' (META.O) lawyers had warned it about the legal perils of using thousands of pirated books to train its AI models, but the company did it anyway, according to a new filing in a copyright infringement lawsuit initially brought this summer.' (Reuters, 12 December) [AIP] We live in a post-expert-advice era. ● Meanwhile at The Register: The Science Fiction Writers Association (SFWA) has asked us all to imagine a future in which builders of AI models offer a price they're willing to pay for the copyrighted material they need, and creators choose whether to pay [presumably meaning 'accept'] it until enough deals are struck that all stakeholders achieve satisfaction.' (Torrentfreak, 14 December; The Register, 15 December)

● The Dead Past. 20 Years Ago, Instant Message 538 confirmed that the New England SF Association notoriously plans for every contingency: 'The rules for other organizations suing the clubhouse were re-stated ...' (Ansible 78, January 1994) ● 50 Years Ago, early rumblings of the first Brighton Worldcon: 'No sooner does Kansas City abandon 1979 than a triumvirate of Pete Weston, Pete Roberts and Malcolm Edwards step forward with a U.K. bid for that year. Things are just in the talking stage now ...' (Fiawol 8, January 1974) ● 60 Years Ago, a newszine fate which Ansible has so far been spared: 'A Checklist of Typographical Errors and Misspellings in Starspinkle's First Year has been arduously compiled by and is available from Walter Breen as part of Fanac 97 [address here omitted]. It's warming and comfortable to know I've such an enthusiastic fan and proofreader ...' (Ron Ellik, Starspinkle 29, 16 January 1964)

● Fanfundery. TransAtlantic Fan Fund. Final warning: nominations for the 2024 TAFF race from North America to the Glasgow Worldcon close on 7 January. Full details in Taffluorescence! at taff.org.uk. ● European Fan Fund: nominations are open for the 2024 EFF race to the coming Eurocon (Erasmuscon in Rotterdam, 16-19 August) and close on 25 January; voting will then run to 1 April. Details at fandomover.com/2023/12/05/2024-eff-call-for-nominations-for-the-second-race. ● TAFF Paperbacks at ae.ansible.uk/?id=taff have now raised over £1000 for the fund.

● Magazine Scene. Dark Matter's November-December 2023 issue is its last after 3 years of publication; publisher Rob Carroll is switching to a series of Dark Matter Presents anthologies. See darkmattermagazine.shop. [F770] ● Not content with relaunching Worlds of IF, Justin T. O'Connor Sloane is doing the same with the sister magazine Galaxy, perhaps semiannually with one short story per issue. (From new editorial in Galaxy, February 1951, reissued at Starshipsloane.com, 14 December)

● Scientific Units Redux. NASA's sample capsule from asteroid Bennu may in fact hold less than the expected 250g, 'likened by one space agency official to the weight of a large hamster.' (BBC, 12 December)

● Court Circular II. The Tolkien Estate won two lawsuits against US author Demetrious Polychron, who was ordered to withdraw his blatant Tolkien rip-off The Fellowship of the King and destroy all physical and electronic copies. The estate and Amazon were also awarded $134,000 in legal fees for his 'frivolously and unreasonably filed' plagiarism suit against the Rings of Power tv series. (Press release, 18 December) [DVB]

● Chog's Masterclass. Now You See It ... 'Now if you break a drop of water into its component atoms of hydrogen and oxygen you do not get less water. You get nothing at all.' (W.E. Johns, To Outer Space, 1957) ● True Romance. 'He contented himself with kissing her knuckles, like a gourmand licking the skin off a well-roasted chicken leg.' (Kim Newman, 'Angel Down, Sussex', 1999) [BA] ● Headbutt Dept. 'Jarid wiped his brow with his trembling palm, then slammed it on his map.' (Brandon Sanderson channelling Robert Jordan, A Memory of Light, 2013) [AR] ● Savour That Simile. 'Karam began to tie a coin pouch at his waist: the gold coins inside had melted into a single lump, like pigs' ears in a jar.' 'Sweat crept down Mat's brow like ants.' (Ibid) [AR] ● High Fantasy Diction. 'A middle-aged woman entered [...] She was squat, shaped kind of like a bell.' 'The dragons probably looked busted up something good.' (Ibid) [AR]
