HOW COVENTRY CROWNS A KING

MIKHAIL II AND THE TARPINIAN CORONATION, 407 C.R.

IN THIS ISSUE YOU WILL FIND THE FIRST IN A SERIES OF ARTICLES ON COVENTRIANIAN CULTURE. REPRINTED FROM THE WINTRING 22, 407, ISSUE OF THE STANBERIAN FREEMAN, THE ARTICLE IS BY THE KING OF TARPINIA (AS TOLD TO A DISTINGUISHED COVENTRIANIAN NOVELIST), AND DESCRIBES THE TRADITION AND EXECUTION OF A SPLENDID CEREMONY. IN CONJUNCTION WITH THIS ARTICLE, WE QUOTE BELOW, WITH SLIGHT RE-WORDING, FROM A NEWS ACCOUNT OF THE EVENT, WHICH APPEARED IN THE SAME ISSUE OF THE FREEMAN, PRESENTING A CONTEMPORARY ACCOUNT OF THE ATMOSPHERE SURROUNDING THE EVENT.

Yerevan, Kingdom of Tarpinia (XI/16/407) (MR) ---Today the halls of the Royal palace were alive with cheers, bells, and fanfares as Mikhail II was crowned King of Tarpinia. Petronius Trensensus, Supreme Minister-elect of the Republic of Glorietta, Prinz Jerome of Duel, Minister of the Treasury of Glorietta, and Arthur Hammerhand, Emperor of Stanberia and President of the Provisional Committee of the Stanberian Republic were among those present in the great hall of the palace, overlooking Yerevan and its great bay from the eastern slope of the Tarpinian Mountains. Never since the days after Shtetnala, evil Viceroy of the King of Pintoreskia, was vanquished (the ceremony of the passion flowers commemorates this event) has the city seen such a joyous clamoring, or so it seems to this reporter.

The solemn ceremony ended with the placing of the silver crown on King Mikhail's head by Edward of Bushania, now (CCT:1957; CCU: 1874) ruler of Tarpinia's New Greenland domains.

After the ceremony, gifts from the various nations were presented. Trensensus, represented by her Duke, Petronius Trensensus, presented the treasury of Tarpinia with $100 Gloriettan, as did Prinz Jerome, [Continued on page 7]

The Cowpertown Epistles

We have to have some kind of organization to keep people who don't know anything about Coventry but a couple of names (but have plenty of big ideas about What They Can Do For/To It) from writing our beautiful little microcosm out of existence. This is where the CIAWOT Foundation comes in. If you can sweat your way through the Constitution, you will find that everybody in CIAWOT has to sign the Glark Oath.

So there's the first thing. I don't care how often you're mentioned in GIMBLE or how fancy you map of the Kingdom of Dale is, you can't be king (even if WHO'S WHO IN COVENTRY says you're king) until you sign the oath. You can't take action unless you're a member. And once you are a member, if you disobey the rules of the organization, such as publishing a zine about Coventry without having it approved, you get Bindlestuffed. I repeat, you have no powers in any realm whatsoever in the Civitas Universalis until you sign that oath. You must sign it.

Now, if you want some say in what goes on, the best thing for you to do is read on in the Constitution. You can sign a Brood Oath, which makes you automatically a voting member of the General Assembly of CIAWOT. This means, if you want something to be done, you can bring up a motion in an issue of the TELECRAPH by sending it to me, and, if it is approved by a quorum, it's law. And you can get more votes in the Assembly by advancing your status according to the by-laws.

And you can run for office; there are at least five elective offices listed in the Constitution, and one of them promises a seat on the Upper Twelve, the Judicial body. Most of the other offices are directly appointive, but if you show interest and enthusiasm, you could well be appointed to one of them. If nothing else, you can join the Church, and have a title, if little more. Eventually, this could make you a Vice-President Cardinal, quite an important office.

CIAWOT is a very complex organization with almost nothing to do, I'll be the first to admit. But that's only because nobody's interested in doing much. At present, most of the business is handled by me. If you want to know anything about Coventry as a whole for sure, I'm the only one that knows anything, really, and so I'm the one to write to.

Unfortunately, I tend to get snowed when somebody thinks up 500 good but obviously un-Coventrian plans for some particular region. I don't like to answer letters like that, and I don't answer, I'm afraid it's a more than definite "no." Fortunately, I have so far run across only one frustration of that type. But usually I can think up the perfect solution by offering the problem-maker a new country. And you'll find it's much easier to get a new domain than to change my opinion.

Write if you're interested. What I reply may confuse you, but if I know Coventrians, the more you are confused, the more you are interested.

THE CROWNING OF THE KING

by MIKHAIL II KING OF TARPINIA

(as told to John Randolph. Reprinted from THE STANBERIAN FREEMAN, Wintring 22, 407 C.R., and slightly reworded, Gwaeron 412.)

It is a tradition among the monarchs of Tarpinia to celebrate a coronation when they succeed the throne upon the death of the ruling monarch, member of the House of Tarpinia. However, when a special state event takes place, a crown may often be placed ceremonially upon the king's head as a part of the event. According to Tarpinian tradition, there are twenty-nine crowns made to adorn the royal head, each more elaborate (as techniques were developed to make them) than the previous one. Some of the crowns are reserved for special occasions.

The most elaborate one is usually worn on the King's birthday, though he may choose any one he prefers. The first crown, the one used in the coronation of Wintring 16 this year, is made of silver, and is the one used in the first coronation of each king since the days of Mikhaïl of Lebania, the first king of Tarpinia. (He was of the House of Lebania, whose last king was driven away by the Tarpinian line.) Later crowns included the one most often worn now by the king, which is gold, invested with large rubies and small emeralds, as well as a crown of pure rubies, one of pearls, one of diamonds, and others of various precious materials.

The coronation is usually held on the steps of the Town Hall in Yerevan, where the ceremony is performed by ordinary Tarpinian citizens chosen by the Mayor of Yerevan in collaboration with the Minister of Personal, Royal, and Senatorial Affairs and various other government officials including members of the Senate from Yerevan. In the Constitutional Monarchy of Tarpinia, the people are even guaranteed the right to dethrone the king, so they also have the power to crown him -- which right they have exercised ever since Alun-Batgar, the last of the Lebanian kings, was thrown out in 729 B.C. by La Florida and his wife Habana. It has become one of the highest public honors to participate in the ceremony.

The recent ceremony was a comparatively simple affair when judged alongside others in Tarpinia's 5000-year history. Yet it was the only one to occur in Mariposa.¹ First a candle, representing purity, a heart made of clear purple stone, representing love, a medallion of the Tarpinian lion on a gold neck chain, representing strength, and a pale-green jewel, representing wealth, were brought in by the King's Chamberlain (Constitutionally speaking, this officer is often the Minister of Personal, Royal, and Senatorial Affairs.) The candle, in the shape of a star, was placed in the king's right hand, burning with a cool yellow light; the purple heart, with the jewel upon it, was placed in the King's left hand, and the medallion was fastened around his neck. During the ceremony, the King was seated on a solid teakwood throne, with aqua cushions.

Then the crown was brought in, the original silver crown of the rulers of Tarpinia, and placed upon the King's head by the Chamberlain. All who were seated (most should be standing) then rise, and all bow to the King. The bells of the churches of Yerevan ring out into the golden Tarpinian morning, and the people cheer.

The people who were not standing during the ceremony (usually visiting dignitaries) are then seated again. The candle, the heart, and the jewel are removed, the candle being put out -- it now burns in the heart of the King. The King's guards, led by the High Treasurer of Tarpinia (or, as in the 407 coronation, by the Chamberlain) present the crown jewels to the King, with a speech explaining the purpose of the presentation.² The King then stands and announces to the people that the coronation is over and the celebration shall begin.

- - - MIKHAIL II, King of Tarpinia

¹In 407, this was Mariposa's only coronation, but on Wedmath 9, 410, Paulus Rex was crowned Stanberian Emperor at Brandy Hall.

²The crown jewels are constitutionally guaranteed to the King as his personal property, and he has the right to do anything he wishes with them.

HOW COVENTRY CROWNS A KING (Continued from p.1): acting as ruler of his nation, known throughout Coventry as Jerandia. The gift was meant for state use until, and if, Tarpinia rejoined Glorietta. Arthur Hammerhand presented the King with one of his nation's new products, a bottle of "Zesto!" for use in the coronation party. The gifts were graciously accepted by the king.

Then the coronation party began. The king and the chamberlain supervised the introduction of a Tarpinian dessert course, complete with marshmallow and chocolate pastries, and many hogsheads and loggerheads of beverages for the various entourage and the quantities of spectators. The guests were seated around the Great Hall dining table, sitting cross-legged on the floor in the Tarpinian manner. Two rounds of "Zesto!" were served, and Edward of Bushania had his first taste, a hot one, of the popular drink. Then there was a round of Tarpinian whiskey (from the famous Gettysburg Inn) and two of Tarpinian champagne. The guests became very merry and began to orgify and get topheavy, but the party was a success. The guests moved back into the Audience Region of the Great Hall, where Arthur Hammerhand and Mikhail demonstrated, with the help of the Royal Orchestra of Tarpinia and the Royal Folk-Dancing Company, a few steps in the Tarpinian manner. The guests began to get unruly, Edward left, and Petronius and Jerome played a few hands of poker. Then Petronius and Jerome left, and Arthur Hammerhand and Mikhail used the rest of the remaining morning for a discussion which did not succeed in getting Tarpinia to join the Stanberian Republic, but which did lay the groundwork for the Stanberian Confederation.

Arthur was dressed in his state uniform, a resplendent trench-coat, Mikhail was in a white robe which flowed in the Tarpinian fashion, with a red sash and cape. Edward was also dressed in a robe for the occasion; Petronius had not brought his state uniform with him, and it only arrived too late for NOTES: Some persons have suggested that one service point per hundred points was a rather facetiously small reward for Volume I Number 2's extravaganza. So it is that we have decided to offer anyone who wishes to take advantage of it the right to profit by their score on last month's test, if they send (or have sent) their answers to the Office of the President. For each 100 points scored over a period in part one, for each fifty in part two, for each 25 in part three, and for each ten in part 4, an individual shall, after having signed the Churchman's application and the Glark Oath, be able to advance in status as a member of the Church of Coventry (one rank for each collection of points as defined above, regardless of CIAWOT status.) Open book testing is allowed.

All things considered, both coronation and party festivities were a great success. Quite possibly the reasons for this, however, were summarized in the Tarpinian invitations to the polulace, which read: "The drinks, according to Tarpinian custom, will be free. All the guests will be by invitation, and of the best blood and cultural background."

NOTE: Though the events depicted originally occurred in Mariposa, in the Civitas Coventrani Terrestrials, an attempt has been made, by the substitution of corresponding Civitas Coventrani Universalis historical names and references, to bring the account into correct historical focus. Still, where such substitutions could not be made, the report is regretfully anachronistic.
