The Amateur Effer:Null-Q press is better than qwertyuiopress.

Sagana/Pillycock/Dagon, John Boardman: I just can't imagine John Boardman at the age of 15 or so. Maybe as a radical intellectualized college student, but certainly never younger than 20 or so. You might be interesting in The Undying Night, current Monarch book by George H. Smith, which is a bitter attack on Ayn Rand and her philosophy. The villain of the book is under the influence of a woman patterned after Rand herself who spouts the Objectivism at every chance. Let me ammend that; she spouts an extract of the Randian Doctrine whenever she can. After reading several parts out of context to rich, he said that it did sound a great deal like what she has written. I don't really know that this is so, all I've read of Rand was "Anthem."

Some Cuban refugees built a mortar and chucked a bomb at the UN today, it seems. Some sort of a cue, all these exiles started yelling and the cops grabbed a woman trying to get into the UN to take a swipe at Che Guevara. Oh well...

First Draft#39, Dave Van Arnam:This is the first time you've missed a mailing, seeing as how you said that FD#39 is published for apa L. Poetry is not not discussed by SF Fans. Rather, so many of us write/wrote it that it is a subject with an infinite n number of reactions. Let me rephrase that: It gets a lot of reactions from each person who writes about it.

This thing down here, now, doesn't mean too much; it's the first thing I've tried to do in a long time, at least since last march. Can you pick up its' thread, Dave?

This
The time of the now
No time for creation
But rather for the creation of soul : Arniniel#3, Goodman: Much liked
Where there is life and learning :The poetry of Susan Pratt; bring her
Of death and forgetfulness :to a meeting. Yes? You are a copycat.
There is nothing save the sands of now.....
Trickling into the seas of dead fire
That are the zealous learners.

OP0#22, Lupoffs:The Scithers Plan seems workable, and I say YES to whatever I think is yesable. You grab me hard.
Gollysnotch, brown and McInerney:Gosh, an uncommmentable commentless commenting.
Degler!#25, Me: I've finally gotten rid of the creaseink the middle of the paper. This Degler! will, unfortunately, be back to one page 3 hours sleep, 3 tests today. Tired.
