Introducing a new column:-

REVIEWING THE BRITISH PROZINES
by Joe Kennedy

With the appearance of the 1st issue of Outlands, now English fantasy semi-slick, Britain can now boast three established prozines. The neatly printed Out-lands #1, featuring stories by J.
R. Fearn, John Gabriel, L. V.
Hoald, A. Kastwa, and others, departments including a brief report of the Pacificon; makes a worthy companion to Carnell's New Worlds and Gilling's Strange Tales. Outlands can be ordered from the publishers, at 19 Richmond Ave, Liverpool 21, England, at 35/- a copy or $1.25 a year.

Another recent arrival is the 2nd issue of New Worlds, featuring a striking space-ship cover printed in blue and gold. Contents are: Living Lies by John Beynon, Lunar Concession by Thornton Ayre (novelottes); Space Ship 13 by Patrick Selby, Vicious Circle by Polton (Fearn) Cross, Foreign-Body by John Brody, The Micro Man
by Aldon Lorraine (Fackerman), Green Spheres by W. P. Cockroft (short stories); plus two articles, Ahead of Reality by L.J. Johnson and a page report of the Pacificon by Ackorman. The mag runs 64 large-size pages, and the quality of its material is on an equal, if not superior, level to that of the current U.S. prozines.
It sells for 2/- from Pendulum Pubs., 10 Old Square, Lincoln's Inn., London, W.C.2., England.

Further publication of Strange Tales is doubtful, according to some English fans. This irregular booklet-sized publication has to-date issued two numbers composed mainly of American reprints, set in microscopic-size type, with covers borrowed from Acolyte and
Vom. -jk

"The World Of Tomorrow Today!"

CONFIDENTIALLY

by Alvin R Brown

(The views expressed in this column are not necessarily those of Fantasy-Times)

Crackpot: Screwball! It wasn't so long ago that stf fans were referred to as such. Lately though, we have "come of age".

It seems though, that we are destined to return to the "crackpot" stage, what with the Shaver fiasco knocking around.

No one, outside of the OSPL, wants to do anything about it as a group. At the last meeting of the OSPL one of the members made a suggestion that I think fills the bill as a method of action.

Why don't we, as individuals disprove of any and all of Rap's and Shaver's theories and settle the matter once and for all!

If you have any concrete evidence to disprove any of the Shaver or mystery send it to me at my address, 139-29 34 Rd, Flushing, N.Y and I'll see that it is publicized.

Why has FFM veered from fantasy to mediocre horror tales and dressed-up adventure yarns? There still must be a wealth of fine-fantasy to be published or has it come to pass that Popular Pubs is no longer interested in the field of fantasy? Or what?

What did the Science Editor of The New York Times mean when he mentioned to Rap that he had noticed that most of the stories in The Book Of Science-Fiction came from Amazing Stories? This columnist can not find in his collection this title. Can anyone help me out on this score?

ON THE NEWS STAND

By Herman Tok

quite a number of proxies to review this week, as this column has been crowded out the last two issues.

Weird Tales for January 1947 is on the stands with a very poor cover, but as usual, the fiction content is good. WT is always dependable for the best in weird and off-trail stories. We would like to see this magazine monthly once again.

Finlay's cover is the best item in the current, Dec '46 issue of Famous Fantastic Mysteries. The lead novel is only a dressed-up adventure story with just a little stf thrown in. Surely there must be plenty of good stf or fantasy books available for publication in FFM. Lawrence was very poor this time.

The dicos are back again and Amazing for January '47 is out. If you hear voices and need a padded cell, by all means read Amazing. If you're a stfan, you'll get it only to complete your collection.

Startling Stories, with the luscious gal on the cover, is out. This January '47 issue has a good novel by Hamilton and a nice set of short stories well illustrated by Marchiono, Stevens and Morey.

An excellent cover illustrating a fair novel by Wilcox is featured on the January '47 Fantastic Adventures. The shorter stories are not bad, and the mag is well illustrated. -ht

Back issues of Fantasy-Times are still available, but the supply is fast disappearing, so if you want to complete your files send for them at once. For information write to: James V Taurasi, 101-02 Northern Blvd, Corona, New York.
