

The Stupidfying Sequel to "The Madman of Mars"

(FAPA)

By

(June 43)

Ittle Forrie Ackerman

What Has Gone Bfor: is best left unrepeated. Aint U elated? Well, alryt! Hite:

ESCAPE

Rahuun Ta-Ka, the son of the dead Madman, sat in his dungeon. For ten, long, Mernosian years he had been confined there, by his mad father, and Rahuun in time had also gone insane. Now that his father was dead no one could prevent Rahuun from escaping from his gloomy dungeon.

He planned to avenge his father by destroying every planet which contained life.

Clair sat in his office on the seven hundred and second floor of the new Hansen building. Slowly he arose and cross the room where he gazed out of the ultra ray window.

Before him was Na-Yuuk formerly New York.

Below him were the numerous 7th ray or radium ray cars. ((They look like a conception by Bok when he was swackt. Bok's cars.)) High in the sky the huge airliners sped back and forth, crossing the Atlantic and returning every three hours.

To his right was the Control Building which controlled every radium light, automatic radiflyer and electric Robot in the city.

Ofcourse by the year 7785 Robots were used for air patrols, wars, factory work, cooking and all sorts of ways which would enlighten peoples work.

To his left was the huge broadcasting station where moving, talking, and 4th dimension pictures were broadcast daily.

Any person owning a Teledimradio could see as well as hear the pictures although they were being broadcast over 4000 miles away. ((When a teledim was on the bim--dimout!))

Clair could also see from his window the Woolworth Building then seven hundred stories highor than it had been in the year 1929. ((Amazing Stories.))

It would have been much taller if it had not been for the war with the Hogdolans which lasted over four hundred years inspite of the Robots.

Clair turned his gaze from the window because of a voice which spoke in his ear.

"Dad" said Loid, "May I take a ride in an aero-car?" "You know you said I could when I was seven-teen."

"Well alright, run along then," said Clair, and in a few moments he saw Loid swiftly rising in a blue and red, 1785 sport model aero-car.

Quite unexpect-ly Clair felt a great jar, he was thrown to the floor, and was concious of some-thing striking his head, then he dropped off into a dreamless sleep.

Thus ended the life of Clair, killed by the greatest earthquake since the year 1975.

Na-Yuuk , Da-var, Lo-San, Ohi, Was-ton and Da-tun in the United States were completly de-stroyed while in foreign countries Ba-lin, Lo-dan An-ra, Ma-rid, Mo-cow, Ar-is Ve-na, Li-bon and Ha-gen were demolished.

As the earthquake occoured Loid gaze out of his aero-car with horrified cyos. Ho know that now he instead of his father must find Foona, Argus, and Nesta if it was possible.

When Nesta had asked to get her doll, Foona and Argus had decided to go with her but told Loid to stay in the rocket and toll Clair to wait them.

When they came back they found to their horror that Clair had left.

Argus realizing there was not a moment to lose secured a rocket and the three of them quickly sprang inside.

Argus pointed the rocket towards Saturn's second ring and started.

BASTAR
((No crax!))

Every minute the air was growing thiner but by a miricle they oscaped from the gravity of Vonus before it was to late.

Argus know that he must be on constant watch for mctorites and not fall asleep and Foona's, Nesta's and his own life de-pended on his staying awake

Hours dragged by and Feena and her child Nesta were fast asleep. It was only by a supreme effort that Argus remained awake, but slowly and surely he was falling asleep. Finally Argus dropped into a slumber of peaceful dreams.

It was early morning when the three Atlanteans were awakened by a slight jar. Feena, Nesta, and Argus set up and rubbed their eyes.

Argus jumped up, and ran to the door. He swung it open expecting to see the familiar landscape of Venut (Saturn's second ring) which he had viewed so many times through his Reflectophone. Instead there before him was an entirely different land than he had ever seen.

Feena and Nesta jumped out of the rocket and ran to their father where they too stood looking at the strange surroundings.

They took a few steps forward when they became aware of shouting which seemed to be coming from the ground. In unison they turned their gaze to the ground where they beheld several hundred creatures like themselves in many respects except their size. Instead of being around five feet high they were a trifle less than six inches tall. Argus was about to push them out of his way when he found he could neither move nor talk and he saw that Feena and Nesta were in the same predicament.

One of the ladies in the group of miniature beings spoke to one of the men and he pressed a button on his coat and disappeared, reappearing in a few minutes with a strange looking contraption. The woman fastened a wire about one leg of each of the three helpless Venusians and turned a dial. Seven minutes later, Argus, Feena, and Nesta were unconscious, reduced to the size of the small inhabitants of Bastar, dressed in Bastarian cloths, and lying upon a table covered with dials, buttons, tubes, lights and many unfamiliar objects. Seven minutes more passed and they were awakened with full knowledge of everything upon Bastar. They know the language, the name the History, and they also know why they had never seen Bastar through the Reflectophone. All of the knowledge was given to Argus, Feena and Nesta through the strange table with its dials and buttons and tubes but only Nesta was ever to use it for Argus and Feena were put to death the next day.

Rahuun Ta-Ka set out for Racquon, (the planet which was discovered in 1958 by Professor Ugene Watsun) to destroy it with a vibration gun which his father had just completed when he was killed by his by the vacuum machine. ((In other words. Nothing killed him!))

This gun was a gray-blue color and was about three inches long but in that small gun were enough condensed vibrations to kill ten thousand people. There were six small bullets in the gun which were filled with the vibrations; The gun was fired, and when the bullet struck an object it exploded letting the vibrations out and so killing anyone within eight miles of its exploded bullet. ((THat's a lotta bull-et!))

Rahuun secured one of the three rockets his father had stored in the basement and headed for Raqueen.

Seven days later Rahuun was within shooting distance of Raqueen. He threw an invisible net of electricity around his rocket so as to kill the vibrations if they chanced to strike it and fired the gun, once twice, three times and then he saw something he had not expected.

He had known that the vibrations would disintegrate people and kill them but he did not know it would destroy earth, rocks and stones, but he had the proof before him for, there where the small planet of Racqueen had stood less that one minute ago now was empty space.

Nesta was heart broken over the loss of her parents but she soon was terrified when she learned that she too was to die. A man stepped forward and tied her to a table as had he done to her mother and father and pressed a small button. A huge knife which was suspended in the air by a rope tied to the ceiling began swinging back and forth coming closer to Nesta every moment. The knife was barely within a quarter of an inch from her face when she fainted. ((Shade of "Pit & the PUNDulum".))

Loid finding there was enough power in his aero-car to carry him for seven hundred miles or more decided to try and find some city which was not destroyed. He finally landed at San-Fis-ko. Here he found shelter in a small hundred story Flat and after a good meal he decided to go to the Lontan Observatory and see if he could find any sign of life on Venus. While he was looking he happened to move the telescope a small bit and found himself gazing upon Racqueen. He was about to turn the telescope back to Venus when to his amazement he saw Racqueen suddenly and mysteriously disappear. As he could account for the disappearance in no way he turned his gaze back to Venus.

Rahuun Ta-Ka although he was demotated realized that the removing of Racqueen would throw the whole Solar System out of order and that there was no telling what awful calamities might occur.

And the most AWFUL CALAMITY that might occur is that U might miss the remaining instalments of this superserial. Don't let your FAPaship lapse!