

- THE REBEL -

MARCH 1937

NUMBER ONE

THE ENDLESS THREAD.

by Ethel C. Poppe

My reign began with the dawn of intelligence,
When first my silken sphere began to unwind.
Through endless æons I have drifted ceaselessly,
And always that silver path I leave behind.

I have circled all the distant planets and suns,
Yet my sphere seems to remain unchanged in size.
I rule all the minds of the entire universe.

Puny things have believed themselves to be wise,
They know not that they have merely followed my lead;
Stumbling along until progress they found.
Because of me, worlds have been conquered—and destroyed.
Still I must go on—making my ceaseless round.

The end of my toil will never come till there be
A speck of intelligence in the Universe.
Till then I will ramble through space—eternally.

I am, entirely without interpretation;
I, bearer of the sphere, am—Imagination
